The chapel

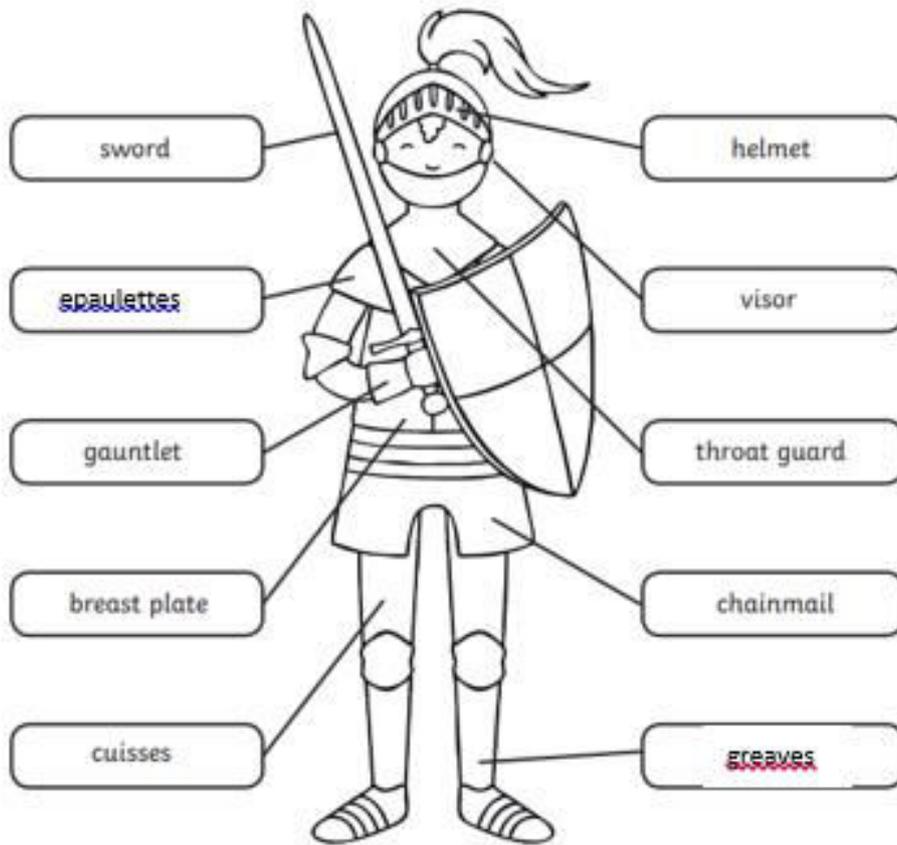

A chapel is a kind of little church. Did you know that every castle had its own chapel? In medieval times people were very religious. The lord and Lady would say their prayers every morning and night. They believed that this would help to keep them safe. Each castle had their own priest to lead the prayers.

In addition the priest would make sure that everyone who lived and worked in the castle stuck with the church's rules. One of the rules was to only eat fish on certain days.

Usually the priest was also a bit like a doctor, people would go to him if they were feeling poorly. He treated people who were ill by making medicines from plants and herbs.

Reading

In the Gatehouse

Soldiers guarded the entrance to the Lord's castle. It was called the gatehouse. They looked out for visitors, and stopped enemies from coming into the castle.

The Great Hall

The Lord met visitors in the Great Hall. Feasts were held there, musicians and jugglers performed for the visitors.

In the Kitchen

The workers in the castle kitchen were usually men, except for the ale-wife who made the beer.

The cooks and bakers made the food while the scullions did the cleaning.

The spit-boy's job was to turn the meat as it cooked over the fire.

The Castle Walls

The soldiers lived in the castle.

They defended the castle walls from their enemies.

If they had time, they pulled up the drawbridge and let down the portcullis to keep attackers out.

They shot arrows and threw rocks at attackers.

Water and Waste

The water keeper looked after the Lord's rivers and ponds. The castle toilets emptied into a pit. People used a handful of hay instead of toilet paper.

The Chapel

Every castle had a chapel. A priest worked there. He said prayers every day with the Lord and his family.

Others made medicines from herbs for people who were ill.

Priests made sure that everyone kept the church rules, such as eating fish on Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays.
